Colo. Shooting Suspect Charged

James Holmes faces 142 counts in deadly spree that killed 12

Centennial, Colo.

James Holmes appeared just as dazed Monday as he did in his first court appearance last week after the deadly Colorado movie theater shootings.

In a packed Denver-area courtroom, Holmes, 24, sat silently and did not react as he heard formal charges against him, including first-degree murder for each of the 12 who died and attempted murder for each of the 58 people who were injured in one of the deadliest mass shootings in recent U.S. history.

When the judge asked the former neuroscience student whether he agreed with his attorney's request to delay a future court hearing so his defense team could have more time to prepare, Holmes said softly: "Yeah."

Monday's hearing was not televised. At the request of the defense, District Chief Judge William Syl-

Victims are assisted by an advocate, left, as they arrive for James Holmes' arraignment Monday in Centennial, Colo. Holmes was charged with 24 counts of murder.

Insanity Defense

Legal analysts expect James Holmes' case to be dominated by arguments over the defendant's sanity. Under Colorado law, defendants are not legally liable for their acts if their minds are so "diseased" that they cannot distinguish between right and wrong. Howvester barred video and still cameras, saying coverage could interfere with Holmes' right to a fair trial.

Holmes was charged with 24 counts of murder, two each for the 12 victims, and 116 counts of attempted murder, two each for the 58 injured. In addition, Holmes was charged with one count of possession of explosives and one count of a crime of violence.

Attorneys also argued over a defense motion to find out who leaked information about a package Holmes allegedly sent to his psychiatrist at the University of Colorado Denver. The package was seized three days after the shooting.

Several media outlets reported that it contained a notebook with descriptions of an attack, but Arapahoe County District Attorney Carol Chambers said in court papers that the parcel hadn't been opened by the time the "inaccurate" news reports appeared.

Prosecutor Tamara Brady said Monday she will subpoena psychiatrist Lynne Fenton to testify whether a notebook is privileged because of a possible doctor-patient relationship. NICHOLAS RICCARDI (AP)

It's NASA's most ambitious and expensive Mars mission yet — and the two-year exploration begins with the red planet arrival late Sunday of the smartest interplanetary rover ever built.

The complicated touchdown NASA designed for the Curiosity rover is so risky it's been described as "seven minutes of terror" — the time it takes to go from 13,000 mph to a complete stop.

Gdansk, Poland

It wasn't supposed to be this way. Mitt Romney outraged Palestinians on Monday, stirring fresh controversy on his visit to Israel just days after insulting the British on what was intended as a feel-good visit to the Olympics in London.

Whether or not the trip changes votes back home, the effect hasn't seemed to be what Romney's presidential campaign had in mind.

His first steps onto the world stage as President Obama's Republican challenger were carefully crafted to avoid political risk. He visited countries that are staunch U.S. allies, limited questions from the media and arranged made-for-TV appearances at symbolic venues in London and Jerusalem.

Instead, as he made his final stop of a three-nation tour in Poland late Monday, Republicans and Democrats alike were shaking their heads in the U.S. Though Republicans said they saw no lasting harm, Democrats raised questions about Romney's ability to handle delicate topics with sensitivity on foreign soil, even under the friendliest conditions.

Earlier Monday, Romney told Jewish donors that their culture is part of what has allowed them to be more economically successful than the Palestinians, outraging Palestinian leaders who suggested his comments were racist and out of touch with the realities of the Middle East. His campaign later said his remarks were mischaracterized.

In Poland, Romney met with the Cold War-era Solidarity leader Lech Walesa in Gdansk, earning his endorsement: "I wish you to be successful because the success is needed to the United States."

Walesa suggested Romney's leadership was needed to restore America's position in the world.

Fighting is heating up in Aleppo, Syria's largest city with 3 million people. The U.N. said 200,000 Syrians have left over the past 10 days as the government trains its mortars, tanks and helicopter gunships on the neighborhoods seized by the rebels.

"I am extremely concerned by the impact of shelling and use of tanks and other heavy weapons on people in Aleppo," said Valerie Amos, top U.N. official for humanitarian affairs, in a statement late Sunday. "They urgently need food, mattresses and blankets, hygiene supplies and drinking water."

Amos said U.N. agencies and the Syrian Red Crescent are working together on supplying those affected by the fighting with blankets and humanitarian supplies, but many remain out of their reach because of the violence.

Aleppo is about 30 miles away from the Turkish border and some of those fleeing the city are headed for Turkey, where tens of thousands of Syrians have already found refuge during the 17-month uprising against authoritarian President Bashar Assad's rule.

Turkey is deploying more troops to the border, sending tanks, armored combat vehicles, more missile launchers and infantry troops, the state-run Anadolu agency reported. Greece has responded by quadrupling the number of guards on its borders with Turkey out of fear of a potential influx of Syrian refugees. (AP)

Door Problems Plague Metro

I was on the eight-car train at Ballston that had a door problem in the height of rush-hour today, delaying my commute by about 20 minutes. When a door on a particular car doesn't close, why does Metro offload the whole train? The other cars were working fine, and Metro obviously has the capability to shut down a single train. They have been doing this all summer with the "hot cars."

I think the operator can't always tell which car is having the door problem. Part of the reason I think that is from being aboard trains where the operator asks us whether we can see a door that isn't closing.

I think Metro should take trains out of service when a door problem occurs. Remember a month or two ago on the Red Line when the doors on a car opened while the train was moving? That car had a door problem earlier on the route, and riders would have been safer if Metro had taken the train out of service after the initial problem.

When I was driving on 295-S Sunday afternoon, I noticed signs stating that a new exit (right before the exit for Nationals Park) would be opening soon connecting 295-S to 395.

Dr. Gridlock offers commuter counseling online at washingtonpost.com.

Do you know whether this ramp will connect to 395 North and South or just North?

I'm pretty sure you're talking about the ramp that the District Department of Transportation opened Monday morning to connect traffic from southbound DC 295 to the 11th Street Bridge. The ramp from the 11th Street Bridge to northbound 295 is scheduled to open this fall.

These are great things for commuters who travel between Maryland and Virginia, or are trying to reach downtown D.C.

As of now, no more need to continue south past the 11th Street Bridge and swing around at Howard Road or Suitland Parkway I think our buses provide a very flexible way of getting around, but they don't have anywhere near the peoplemoving capacity of the train system.

to get on the northbound side to use the bridge. This is a breakthrough.

Do you know whether the new solid lines on I-66 will be enforced during HOV hours or will they also be enforced for the 80-plus percentage of the time that there is no HOV?

They're for all the time. Not just the HOV hours.

Metro can make me furious, and while the bus isn't perfect, I find it to be much more reliable and convenient than the Metro. Why don't more people take the bus? Is there some stigma attached to it? The annoying issues are bus bunching and plain old not coming.

I think our buses — Metrobus and the suburban bus lines — provide a very flexible way of getting around that supplements the train system, but they don't have anywhere near the people-moving capacity of the train system and, as you correctly note, are subject to some pretty bad bunching as they move through crowded streets.

TRACK WORK THIS WEEKEND

Va. Nets $129M Surplus

Commonwealth tops expectations for the third-straight year

Richmond, Va.

Virginia's government finished the 2012 fiscal year last month with about $129 million more in general revenue than what was predicted in the official forecast on which the state budget is based.

Gov. Bob McDonnell planned to discuss the final revenue figures later Monday.

Finance Secretary Ric Brown said revenues for the 12 months ending June 30 increased by 5.4 percent over the previous fiscal year, ahead of forecast growth of 4.5 percent.

The better-than-expected revenues, however, are only part of the total surplus. The other part, created by savings and account balances swept from state agencies, will be reported Aug. 15, the day McDonnell addresses the combined House and Senate money committees.

Fiscal year 2012 was the third year in a row for the state's general fund collections to exceed their budgeted forecasts. The general fund pays for such core state services as public safety, health care and aid to public schools.

Brown, who was attending a national conference of state budget officers, said finishing ahead of projections in an economy mired in a tepid recovery is gratifying and something few of his counterparts at the meeting can claim.

"Any time you can come in at 5 [percent] or 6 percent growth, I'll take it," Brown said, recalling months of uncertainty over the past fiscal year when it appeared the state could end up with a shortfall. Bob Lewis (AP)

Teens Pitch Ideas to Revamp Bridge

Washington

The old 11th Street Bridge isn't much to look at: It's being dismantled, so rubble piles up over the dirty water of the Anacostia River.

But within a few years, a group of city planners say, it could be beautiful, a destination park spanning the river and connecting two of the city's most iconic neighborhoods.

On Friday, a group of local teenagers pitched their ideas for how the city could create a public space on the bridge that would draw people from the two deeply divided sides of the river. The park could include playgrounds, benches overlooking the water, shops, fountains and a stage for plays or musical acts.

The river is a dividing line between Anacostia, a predominantly black neighborhood with high unemployment, and Capitol Hill, a place bustling with members of Congress and more white residents.

The teens' ideas included a hotel, a water filter for the river, a bike path, paddleboats and a fishing pier.

This fall, the city is launching a national design competition for the park. The best-case scenario would be to have the redesigned bridge open by 2016, but planners acknowledged that with funding questions, that's probably unrealistic. They hope that the park would be maintained by a private partner, either a company or a nonprofit.

On Twitter, a new Olympic sport: Criticizing the Games

London2012

In the age of social media, NBC now has millions of television critics who make their opinions known — instantly — about every aspect of Olympics coverage.

These critics even have their own hashtag on Twitter: #nbcfail. The online complaints focused Saturday on NBC's decision to air the marquee swimming event won by American Ryan Lochte on tape delay in prime time, and Friday on the network not streaming the Opening Ceremonies online. On Sunday, the critics started early, with viewers wondering why the U.S. men's basketball team's opening game aired on a cable network while women's cycling was shown on NBC.

The conversation is so active that NBC's executive producer of the Games, Jim Bell, took to Twitter to answer critics.

"#nbcfail is filled with a lot of crying and snark and humor, but NBC can actually learn something from it," said Jeff Jarvis, a media critic who writes the Buzzmachine .com blog.

Complaints about tape-delayed coverage are an evergreen with Olympics held on foreign soil. But the London Games are the first to be held with Twitter, Facebook and other social media sites in full flower, in a mobile phone era where people carry computers that instantly deliver news in their pockets.

(AP) close together at such a major meet. His quickest turnaround was about a half-hour.

"She's a racer and she knows what to do," Phelps said. And she's still got five more events to go.

Matt Grevers kept the gold medals coming for the U.S. in rata-tat fashion, following up Franklin's win with one of his own in the men's 100 back.

For good measure, Nick Thoman made it a 1-2 finish for the red, white and blue.

Rebecca Soni nearly pulled out a third U.S. gold, rallying furiously on the return leg of the 100 breaststroke. But she couldn't quite catch blazing Lithuanian Ruta Meilutyte, a gold medalist at the tender age of 15. Paul Newberry (AP)

Phelps Moves On: Phelps didn't have any medal races on Monday, but he did advance comfortably through the prelims and semis of the 200 butterfly, going into Tuesday's final with the fourth-best time. This will be his second attempt at becoming the first male swimmer to win the same individual event at three straight Olympics. He failed in the 400 medley, and Japan's Kosuke Kitajima came up short of the same feat in the 100 breaststroke. (AP)

Americans Fall Off Their High Horse

Big talk amounts to little for U.S., which fails to win a medal

Gymnastics

The plan was to keep it close until their last routine on the high bar. That's where those things Americans like to think they still do better than anybody else in the world — invent stuff, take risks and show off — were supposed to finally deliver some golden dividends.

Instead, by the time the highflying U.S. men's team arrived there Monday night, it wasn't close enough to matter. They'd long ago been tripped up by the pommel horse, the most pedestrian piece of equipment in gymnastics, a 4-foot tall, 5-foot long beast of burden they haven't learned how to ride for nearly three decades and counting.

"There's no explaining it. I've only been around so long, so I don't know the whole history," John Orozco said after he and the rest of the U.S. contingent finished a disappointing fifth. "We've been trying to get better. That's all we can do."

Those two years of talk about how this U.S. squad was ready to climb in the saddle and hang with the sport's big boys — the Chinese and Japanese, not coincidentally the gold and silver medalists here — turned out to be just that. Talk.

The Chinese won their secondstraight Olympic title in men's gymnastics and their third in four Games in a rout Monday, making fools of everyone who wrote them off after a dismal performance in qualifying.

It took five minutes and a video review to sort out the silver and bronze medalists after Japan questioned the score of three-time world champion Kohei Uchimura "There's definitely disappointment. We are one of the best teams in the on pommel horse, the last routine. Japan jumped from fourth to second after judges revised Uchimura's score, bumping Britain down to bronze and Ukraine off the medals podium.

It was the British men's first team medal in a century. (AP)

Quarterback advises RGIII while fighting to be the top backup

Last year at about this time, Rex Grossman was battling John Beck for the Redskins' starting quarterback spot and making spirited proclamations about the team winning the NFC East.

A year later, after Washington managed five wins under Grossman's stewardship and missed the playoffs for a fourth-straight year, the 2003 first-round draft pick is again fighting it out with another quarterback, this time for the backup spots behind Robert Griffin III, who already has been named the team's starter by coach Mike Shanahan

It's not even a given that Grossman will be first off the bench behind Griffin, who was selected No. 2 overall in April's NFL draft. In the fourth round, the Redskins added Kirk Cousins, the former Michigan State quarterback. Cousins and Grossman are competing to be the top reserve.

"I'm just trying to do what my role is, do the best I can," Grossman said. "The situation is we've got a new, young guy that's going to be a great talent. He's the future

He also is advising the Heisman Trophy winner about managing the countless outside distractions that come with being the Redskins' highest draft pick in a dozen years.

Building on His Success

Olympic gymnastturned-developer now builds active communities in D.C.

It's been 16 years since Jair Lynch won the silver medal in the parallel bars at the Atlanta Olympics. But the 40-year-old won't even do a cartwheel today.

"Gymnastics is not a sport with a master's program," says Lynch, who used to train six hours a day. "The joints can't keep up when they're not in shape. Even simple things like tumbling are hard on your wrists and elbows."

The Shaw resident, now a real estate developer, is focused on another kind of maneuver: invigorating neighborhoods in the District. Jair Lynch Development Partners, which he founded in 1998, has created 1.65 million square feet worth of schools, housing, commercial buildings and recreation centers.

In his projects, Lynch tries to engineer an environment where people make active choices. "We think about the little things, like lights in stairwells," says Lynch, who wants to encourage folks to hoof it rather than ride an elevator. He's put in lots of bike racks, and the next step is installing bike decks — where people can do routine maintenance — in the hopes of encouraging more riding.

He's betting that the best way to get today's youth more active is through buildings that provide spaces and opportunities similar to the ones he had growing up in Shepherd Park. Lynch's father, an avid soccer player in his native Trinidad, got him kicking the ball around early. Then, at the age of 8, ting goals and differentiating himself from the pack.

"When I was competing, the only way to get a 10.0 was through bonus points for risk, originality and virtuosity," he says. "Those traits translate into the work I do."

Those years at the gym haven't been totally forgotten. Lynch gradually moved into yoga, bike riding and swimming, which — along with weightlifting - form the basis of his fitness regimen today. Swimming has quickly become a favorite activity, not only because it gives him an opportunity to take a dip in pools all over the city, but also because he can take his nearly 3-year-old daughter with him.

This switch to endurance fitness is still taking some getting used to for Lynch, who was accustomed to minute-long routines. Doing laps for half an hour is all he can muster. "My wife does twice as much as I do," he says. "I notice that when I'm sitting on the side of the pool."

Sitting is the activity that's bringing Lynch to London this year. Since 2004, he's served on the board of the U.S. Olympic Committee, and he plans to be cheering at as many competitions as possible.

"There's a common thread between all athletes in terms of grit," Lynch says. "It gives me goose bumps to see them perform and really persevere."

And it gives him the motivation to do the same here in Washington. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

Ultimate Out-of-Office Reply

I recently got a new job that's a huge improvement over my current one — better pay, better commute and more interesting and challenging work. The new place could sort of be considered a competitor to my current place, but not directly. I just gave my notice last week, and ever since then, all of my co-workers have been cool to me, like they are mad at me for leaving, including the ones I considered close friends. SADDENED

Your co-workers may have hard feelings, and you might not be able to do anything about it. It seems you've lined up a super-ideal job change (Will the new office also have daily harp serenades?) and they might be jealous of you. Or, they might not like goodbyes, or they might just feel hurt that you've chosen to leave.

Examine your behavior and make sure you're not flaunting your good fortune. Bring communal treats to the office with a note thanking everyone for the friendship and saying you'll be sad to leave but will stay in touch. If you're being gracious and they're still being aloof, you might need to accept that these friendships were in cube only.

Can't Tune Out Twisted Sister

How do I keep the

in-law who is big-peace with a sister-

oted, ignorant and rude to my children? I am almost at the point of not allowing my children to be in her presence, but she is at virtually every family gathering or holiday that we spend with my husband's parents (who are fine). I swear, she is one of the worst people I've ever met, and I often marvel at the fact that she's related to the man I chose to spend my life with.

Hopefully, that very man is standing up to her. He's got the most significant role in this, as it's ultimately his duty not to let the family member he was born with do damage to the family he chose.

CAN'T TAKE IT

Together, you can agree to limit your exposure, to initiate more visits with just his parents or to have a private conversation with her. You can also have discussions with your children about how you don't agree with everything that their aunt says, and how if she ever makes them feel bad, they should talk to you about it. Set an example by not tolerating the worst of her behavior. Your kids need and deserve to see their parents standing up and stopping this.

Instructor Michael Joel Hall, above, can't teach because of injuries from an attack.

Lend a Helping Hand (and Pose)

Proceeds from yoga classes will support an injured instructor

As soon as word got out last week that 29-year-old Michael Joel Hall — founder of Mid City Yoga and a sought-after instructor across D.C. — had been attacked on his way home, just about everyone went to the mat for him.

"We needed to do something," says yoga instructor Peg Mulqueen, who knew her friend was in trouble. His apartment had recently burned down, and because he had no renters insurance, he'd lost almost everything.

Hall and his boyfriend were reportedly headed to their new place in Eckington when a bunch of guys bashed in the right side of Hall's face. (Police are investigating.) The subsequent surgery and recovery would be difficult for anyone, but Hall doesn't have health insurance to cover his bills. And there's no medical leave for yoga instructors — you don't teach, you don't get paid. So those doctor's orders to stay in bed for a few weeks are extra painful.

No one wants Hall to suffer any further. Mulqueen and Mike Graglia, another friend and yoga instructor, fired off emails to Lulu-

It's Simply The Breast

A local mom arranges an event to encourage federal protection for nursing everywhere

Rachel Papantonakis is tired of people who behave like boobs when it comes to breast-feeding.

"Breast-feeding mothers, on the whole, are not exhibitionists or looking to flaunt what they're doing," says the District resident, a 32-year-old mom of two. "If a child can be bottle-fed someplace, so too should he be able to be breast-fed."

It doesn't always work that way in Washington, despite a law that recognizes the right to breast-feed in public. In December, at a D.C. government building, a mom nursing her 4-month-old was accused by a security guard of indecent exposure. Earlier last year, guards at the Hirshhorn Museum suggested a mom sit on a toilet instead of a bench to feed her daughter.

Spurred on by these incidents, Papantonakis has organized The Great Nurse-In (Greatnursein.org) on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Capitol grounds. She expects up to 1,000 attendees for the event, which will feature performers and activities, as well as speeches by breast-feeding proponents.

Papantonakis' goal is a federal mandate that provides for full protection for public breast-feeding, repercussions for harassers of nursing moms, space to breast-feed or pump and store milk at workplaces and federal funding for breast-

There's no reason to take baby steps, says Ivor Horn, a pediatrician at Children's National Medical Center. Research has shown that breast milk can reduce childhood infection rates and boost growth and development.

Even when nursing continues beyond a year — the duration recommended by the American Academy of Pediatrics - mother and child reap bonding benefits, Horn says. And the big winners? Other people who don't want to hear a screaming kid.

"When we get on an airplane, the easiest way to quiet him down is to boob him," says Desiree Lomer-Clarke, a 33-year-old Arlington mom who still nurses her 2-yearold. "I feel like everyone should thank me for doing it."

But during her visit to D.C., she somehow managed to fulfill her duties and still get over to Georgetown with her coach to squeeze in her daily four-hour training regimen.

That routine involves a lot of work at the track, along with serious conditioning in the weight room. One of her favorite exercises to pick up her pace: box blasts.

When is the best time to teach your 5-year-old to play chess? When the deluxe CD reissue of the GZA's 1995 hip-hop classic "Liquid Swords" arrives in the mail. This box set comes with a chessboard built right into the package — plus game pieces, a remastered version of the album and GZA liner notes on making one of the finest Wu-Tang Clan solo records.

This edition also features an instrumentals disc, so you can focus on the masterful, moody production RZA brought to the disc. The vocal-free version can also act as a PG-rated soundtrack for the chess lessons, leaving you to concentrate on rook strategies rather than diving for the volume every time GZA or one of his Wu-Tang brethren drop a curse word, which is scientifically proven to be "quite often."

The board itself is too small to play on regularly, and "The Chess Box" edition is CD-only; the double-LP reissue just includes a poster of the iconic cover art. But as a physical manifestation of the lyrical war games of "Liquid Swords," "The Chess Box" edition is spot-on. The only thing missing is a tiny samurai sword.

Beyond Fringe

D.C. theaters should build on the festival's enormous success

Stage

Even before the crowds sporting their official admission buttons began receding from the Capital Fringe Festival, which ended Sunday as one of the most artistically successful in the event's seven-year history, the speculation started about which plays and acts might turn up somewhere in D.C. again.

Surely, we'll be seeing a hit like "The Brontes," the clever literary concert-musical that rocked out under the festival tent just off Mount Vernon Square, courtesy of the troupe that calls itself Dizzy Miss Lizzie's Roadside Revue. "DC Trash," Ron Litman's sold-out solo show redolent of indigenous wisdom and humor, seems by the reactions of reviewers and audiences to cry out for a spot on some other club program. And "Beertown," the endearing exercise in democratic drama that proved wildly popular throughout its run in Woolly Mammoth Theatre's rehearsal hall, has demonstrated its ability to settle in for a longer stay.

Under the auspices of the Fringe Festival itself, a small number of shows will indeed return Nov. 1, as part of the 18-day festival extension known as Fall Fringe. But as for the city's year-round arts institutions figuring out how to annex the output and harness the energy of Fringe? That's still not occurring.

"The Brontes," a musical satire purportedly chronicling the singing members of the literary Bronte family, was presented at the Capital Fringe Festival.

The town's performing-arts companies remain far too detached from what's going on at ground level to take advantage of some of the theatrical developments happening just beyond their doorsteps.

What this year's Fringe — which ran from July 12 to 29 — spoke to so vibrantly (and poignantly) was the passionate desire of emerging playand dancemakers from this region to claim a larger share of respect and attention. Capital Fringe has truly matured into an enriching

The Capital Fringe Festival will return to its ramshackle headquarters on New York Avenue NW next summer, even as the block undergoes a drastic redevelopment. Fringe presents more than 100 acts in more than a dozen small venues over the course of three weeks. On New York Avenue, a handful of converted rooms and an outdoor tent form the core cluster of Fringe's performance space. The plan now is to move the entire operation to a new location in time for the 2014 festival. (TWP) regional showcase. And audiences are responding: By Sunday, Fringe officials were reporting more than 29,000 tickets sold, outpacing last summer's totals.

Julianne Brienza, the Fringe Festival's co-founder and executive director, says she thinks a critical mass is being reached and that Fringe artists from the region will be engaged in ever more varied conversations with the big-name arts organizations. The artists are displaying staying power.

"I think Fringe started at a good time here," Brienza says. "And the city is getting to the point where it's a place, and not just a municipality." What she means, in part, is a "place" for younger makers of theater to feel as if they're becoming part of something for which it's worth sticking around. That feeling can't sink in deeply enough, and it's up to the community's leaders to make sure it does.

An Ongoing Journey: Peter Jackson is adding a third film to what was planned to be the two-part series "The Hobbit." The director said Monday that after viewing a cut of the first film and part of the second, there was room for a third. "We know how much of the tale of Bilbo Baggins ... would remain untold if we did not fully realize this complex and wonderful adventure," he said. Part one, "The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey," is out Dec. 14. (AP)

The Brains Behind Bacon

'Pyg' tells a magical tale through the eyes of a 'learned pig'

Book Review

The protagonist and, as it were, first-porcine narrator of this quirky little book is a pig called Toby.

Toby isn't just any old farmyard pig. Our hero owes his name and much of his story to the late 18th-and early 19th-century phenomenon of "learned pigs," which stunned onlookers with their performances at traveling fairs. The pigs were trained to follow covert commands, apparently doing arithmetic and spelling out answers to simple questions by picking up appropriately marked cards in their mouths.

"Pyg" ($15, Penguin Books) purports to be the memoir of the most famous of them: an animal who, his magician-handler claimed, was able to read the minds of members of his audience. In Russell Potter's magical rendering, Toby's story is both a travelogue and a sometimes unsettling inquiry into the nature of animal intelligence. It's not written as a vegetarian treatise, but it might make you think twice before you pick up another pork chop.

Toby is tragically caught between two worlds; he is neither a pig nor a person. Despite his command of human language, Toby knows that a pig would never truly belong among people. (Pigs are mostly nameless creatures, destined to be known only by their body parts: "Loin or Roast.") And personhood has its downside, too, for only people could come up with such ingenious means of mistreating one another and (on this point the wellread pig cites Goethe) be "far beastlier than any Beast."

Yet how could such an erudite animal return to the sty — and thence, perchance, the table?

It's a perplexing question. And because this is a memoir, we never learn the outcome of the other issue that preoccupies Toby: What ultimately becomes of the Loin and the Roast. Frances Stead Sellers (THE WASHINGTON POST)

'Moves' Has Swagger

Cameras follow four dancers as they start their own company

Reality

Is there room for another dance show?

Just days after "Dancing With the Stars" concluded on ABC, Fox brought us the latest season of "So You Think You Can Dance," a superior and often overlooked talent series recently nominated for an Emmy.

In May and June, CW aired "Breaking Pointe," set in the closeknit and high-strung world of a ballet company. That series demonstrated remarkable intelligence and restraint, avoiding manufactured "drama" and emphasizing the dancers' talent and humanity. In addition to these dance series, there's been the summerlong onslaught of "America's Got Talent" and, now, the Olympic Games, with their own share of emotional backstories and performance melodrama.

In the face of so much competition and distraction, Oxygen launches "All the Right Moves," featuring impressive talent from familiar shows.

Choreographer Travis Wall has worked on "So You Think You Can Dance." Teddy Forance was both a dancer and choreographer on "Dancing With the Stars," and Juilliard-trained dancer Kyle Robinson was also recently featured on "Dancing With the Stars." Nick Lazzarini won "So You Think You Can Dance" in its very first season.

Drama, or at least melodrama, ensues as these four dancers pool their talents and start their own contemporary dance company called Shaping Sound. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNIVERSAL UCLICK)

-@JAYHARVERARTS adapts a fitting response to writer Jonah Lehrer's resignation from The New Yorker on Monday after he admitted to fabricating quotes from Bob Dylan in his book "Imagine: How Creativity Works," of which publisher Houghton Mifflin Harcourt said it will halt shipment and e-book sales immediately.

"We'll find out if affirming the humanity of gay and lesbian Americans is really the grave political risk many have claimed it to be."

- WASHINGTONPOST.COM/BLOGS/ PLUM-LINE considers the weight of reports that the Democratic Party will officially include marriage equality in its platform at the national convention in Charlotte, N.C.

"Danny Boyle's Opening Ceremony was intended to be a triumph of egalitarianism. Yet they still needed a man to play the role of a queen? I'm not saying they needed to find another 86-year-old willing to jump out of a helicopter. But surely there were plenty of women who would have looked more regal in that salmon, v-neck dress."

-SFGATE.COM reacts to news that the stuntman who played the role of a skydiving Queen Elizabeth during Friday's Opening Ceremonies was Gary Connery, who has also appeared in "Indiana Jones" movies.

"The Hangover 3 has been confirmed. I think these guys should just stop drinking.

-@JACKHOWARD offers a simple solution to the condition that's driving the franchise to a third installment, confirmed Monday when Legendary Pictures released a logo for the film, due out next May.

"And while you can't accept your first gold medal of the Games without a bit of flair, [swimmer Ryan] Lochte popped in his American flag diamond grill -as one does at the Olympics. ... Officials informed Lochte he wouldn't be given his gold unless he spit out the bling before hitting the podium. So obviously he did, but he popped that baby back in ASAP and flashed the grin that embarrassed a nation."

-FASHIONISTA.COM recounts what's sure to be one of the more memorable moments for the already twice-gold medalist at the London Games.

Horoscope

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You may be able to snatch victory from the jaws of defeat merely by engaging in some creative bartering.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You may not be able to choose sides; that decision is likely to be made for you, before you are aware there is a conflict raging.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Now is the time to put in your bid for something that will only go to one or two people for whom the timing is just right.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) That which appears to be squarely in balance may actually be ready to topple — but you can prevent disaster by stepping in right now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) A case of mistaken identity has you doing something you never thought you would have the chance to do. You can enjoy it fully.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may be trying to be too many different things to too many other people; it's time once again to identify your true center.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Any attempt to get something for nothing is likely to fall flat — and, perhaps, get you into a bit of hot water.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) If you've been keeping accurate records you should have no trouble providing information to one who can help you get a leg up.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You and a friend may find yourselves missing the old days — but a trip down memory lane will remind you of a reality best left in the past.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Those who know you best know that there is something wrong with the image you are presenting; it's a subtle but significant discrepancy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may be put in a position in which you are required to make up your mind about something rather dicey before you are ready to do so.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Attempts to reason with someone who has long held you in contempt may not yield the desired results — but the time will soon come.

NOT AS BAD AS IT SOUNDS! Olivia Munn Suffers From Trichotillomania

Olivia Munn says she suffers from trichotillomania, an impulse-control disorder that causes its sufferers to pull out their hair — in Munn's case, her eyelashes, she tells the New York Daily News. "I don't bite my nails, but I rip out my eyelashes," she said. "It doesn't hurt, but it's really annoying. Every time I run out of the house, I have to stop and pick up a whole set of fake eyelashes." (EXPRESS)
